WHY VOTE?

When President Franklin Roosevelt signed Executive Order 9066, which led to the internment of Japanese Americans, there were no Japanese Americans in the U.S. Senate, House of Representatives, or any other major elected leadership position in America.

When the Civil Liberties Act of 1988, the legislation which provided redress to Japanese Americans interned during WWII, was signed into law, there were a number of Japanese Americans in the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives.
